Online chats feature faculty

MANAGING EDITOR

MyLead, an interactive leadership discussion facilitated through the MyBGSU web portal by numerous distinguished faculty members, began last week and will run through the end of March.

The program poses a question about leadership every week through MyBGSU, and is available to any student who uses the portal. Last week's issue, titled "Everything I learned about leadership I learned at BGSU," facilitated by Kevin Bailey, associate dean of students in the Office of Campus Involvement (OCI), was a large success.

Bailey, who also founded the University's Leadershape, a summer leadership institute, said this program is the brainchild of a face-to-face discussion program he began three years ago, but was only mildly successful due to conflicts with meetings and classes.

"The Leadership Workshop series was successful, but we think MyLead will be much more successful," Bailey said. "This way, if the topic is of interest, and a student has access to a computer, they are available to discuss this topic for a week."

The program is open to any student at the University, but the student must be loaded into the server by Bailey's office.

The OCI does target specific students in designated leadership roles and organizations that may be particularly interested in the week's topic. This week, for instance, Bailey's office was sure to alert the Women's Center and other women's groups about the discussion of women in leadership roles.

Other issues include topics leadership and women, self-expression and disenfranchised communities.

Bailey said the first week was slow-moving, but they ended having a dozen people viewing

Beauty of Arctic inspires address

By Andrew Scharf
REPORTER

University students were able to experience a trip through the Arctic's Northwest Passage on Tuesday night.

Author and environmentalist Jon Waterman gave a presentation based on his book "Arctic Crossing."

The book details Waterman's solo journey along the 2,200 mile stretch known as the Northwest Passage.

"The reason I was drawn to the Arctic was its intense physical beauty," Waterman said.

Waterman's journey was accomplished through several different stages.

He traveled during much of the summer months when ice had drifted away from the shore and the sun stayed above the horizon 24 hours a day.

Most of his journey was completed by paddling a canoe from the islands that line the Arctic.

During his journey he encountered many Inuit people.

Waterman presented photographs of prebuilt homes, soda and sewage trucks as a part of Inuit villages.

According to Waterman, many effects of these changes has brought negative aspects to Inuit lives.

"Many of the processes of assimilation wreak havoc upon their health," Waterman said.

Waterman also described some near misses with wildlife in the area.

Grizzly and polar bears would follow his path.

At one point in his travels Waterman fell off his canoe and into the frigid ocean waters.

He was saved from hypothermia by being near a group of naturally smoking coals. He was able to stand above them to warm himself.

With his presentation Waterman showed hundreds of photographs and video taken during the excursion.

He presented the beauty of the area to stress the importance of keeping the Arctic Wildlife Refuge safe from oil drilling.

"I thought it was better to speak to the audience passion

EFFICIENCY THROUGH TECHNOLOGY

PREPARATION SAVES U. MONEY

Despite tough economic times and a winter yielding record-breaking low temperatures across the nation, the University hasn't had trouble paying the heating bill.

"We had a little cold snap for a week or 10 days in January and it wasn't much different than the one we had in December last year," Carl Cogar, assistant vice president of facilities services, said. "Each winter has its cold snaps and there hasn't been anything so far this year that's caused us to rethink the budget."

Most of the University's heat originates from steam produced at the central heating plant on campus. This steam is also the source of much of the hot water supply in restrooms, showers and dining hall kitchens.

Running 24 hours a day, every day of the year, the heat plant is home to seven employees and three natural gas fired boilers.

The plant, which has been running by computer automation for more than three years, provides steam to almost every part of campus except the Perry Field House and buildings across Mercer Road.

Though technology can bring efficiency and savings, workers say they miss the days and nights brimming with hot coals and ashes.

"I liked the old plant. It was more hands on," Bob Whitman, chief engineer, said. "It felt like you did something because there was a lot more work involved."

Though work at the heat plant isn't as labor intensive now, it still provides for the needs of the campus community.

"The rate of steam production coming off those boilers is entirely dependent on the demand for steam around campus," Cogar said. "And that's entirely a result of the temperature."

According to Cogar, the amount spent annually for heating—$3 million—hasn't changed much over the years despite temperature fluctuation.

"As the temperature goes down, the steam production automatically goes up," he said. "But from year to year there's not much change."

For University officials, this is good news and means that more money can stay in the bank where it belongs.

TECHNOLOGY: Paul Vollmar, stationary engineer at the heating plant, intently watches the computers which control the functions of the plant, checking for any possible problems. The heating plant has been computer automated for more than three years.

"We always plan ahead because utilities are so unpredictable," Edward Whipple, vice president for student affairs, said. "We don't gamble a lot. I think the institution budgets very conservatively, which is really very beneficial in these times where everything is uncertain."

According to Chris Dalton, senior vice president for finances and administration, the ability to plan ahead is something that facilities services can boast, especially when it comes to heating.

"Cogar has done an excellent job of timing our gas purchases, in particular, buying most of the gas needed for the winter months ago when the gas prices were much lower than they currently are," Dalton said.

University officials know that such careful planning can really pay off during tight budget times. "When you get into tough times like we're in right now, both locally and nationally, it makes sense to be very careful about how we spend money," Whipple said.

The University began implementing money savings programs months before Governor Taft's announcement that Ohio higher education funding would be cut if his tax proposals didn't go through.

According to Dalton, a practice dubbed "salary savings," or a temporary freeze on hiring for administrative and classified staff positions, has already saved the University more than $1 million in its first six months.

Also, reductions in the funds available for classroom and laboratory materials, traveling, equipment replacement and student employment have also been lifesavers to the University's budget.

These money-saving tactics extend to departments too—including Whipple's own student affairs.

"We look at how we spend money," Whipple said. "We look at our operating dollars and ways that we can be more efficient in regard to buying products, traveling and how we use our communication. I think that's pretty standard across the University."

Something that isn't standard, however, is the widespread use of new technologies to transform office efficiency into big dollars for the University.

"One area that we continually have to look at to provide us mechanisms to be more efficient is through technology," Whipple said. "The ways we can apply technology are so numerous and I don't think we're quite there yet."

Convicted killer dies quietly

By Liz Sidoti
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LUCASVILLE, Ohio — A calm and quiet Richard E. Fox was executed yesterday for his 14-year-old crime of kidnapping, strangling and stabbing a college student he had lured to a fake job interview.

The 47-year-old politely declined to make a final statement and kept his eyes closed as three drugs were injected into his arms in the death chamber of the Southern Ohio Correctional Facility.

"No, sir," Fox answered when Warden James Haviland asked if he would like to say any last words.

No appeals were pending when Fox was brought into the death chamber at 10 a.m. Clemency was denied a week ago, and a court had refused to consider his claim that he should be resentenced.

Fox was executed for killing Leslie Keckler, 18, near the northwest Ohio city of Bowling Green after she rejected his advances.

"Justice has been served," Chad Keckler, one of her brothers, said later, standing in front of 12 friends and relatives holding hands. "Leslie and my mother can now be at peace."

The heavyset, balding Fox was strapped to a white-clothed gurney. He wore blue prison-issued pants with one red stripe down each leg, a white cotton shirt and brown shoes.

Facing the ceiling, he avoided looking at witnesses, guards or the warden, who stood next to him. His hands were open, palms facing up and his eyes were closed, fluttering only briefly as the drugs began to take effect.

Fox swallowed once and pursed his lips. His chest and stomach rose and fell quickly more than a dozen times, the force of the air causing his lips to sputter and his chin to shudder.

As his breathing appeared to slow, Haviland watched his chest closely for several minutes before nodding to the doctor to determine the time of death — 10:13 a.m.

It was the sixth execution since Ohio reinstated the death penalty in 1999. The state prisons department expects four or five more rather than what they don't like," Waterman said. "I wanted to impress upon people that if you have passions that you follow them."

At the end of the presentation Waterman gave information that students could use to contact with Congressional representative about the issue of oil drilling on the refuge.

Waterman also spoke to a few environmental study classes. During his presentations with classes he argued for the preservation of the refuge.

During these presentations Waterman showed photographs detailing the effects of oil spills and modernization upon the habitat.

"I think it's important for me to come to places where people will respond," Waterman said. "So many people that want to develop ecology haven't been out there

Waterman was brought to the University by the Center for Environmental Programs.

The program sees Waterman as a living example of what it stresses.

"We try to get students out into the environment," Holly Myers-Jones, director of environmental studies, said. "We try to have students understand how important actually being there is."

the topic and seven people actually discussing it. This week, he said, those numbers had already been met.

The questions are discussed for a week, beginning Monday at noon when the question is originally started. The topic runs through midnight of that week.

Other facilitators include Ellen Broido of the college student personnel program, Joe Austin of the pop Culture department, vice presidents Ed Whipple, John Folkins and Chris Dalton and Kristine Hoover, an instructor in the department of management.

"When we went about picking topics and facilitators, we wanted to include any topic dealing with expression, because leadership is a form of expression," Bailey said. "That's how we got the tattooing topic started, because that is definitely a form of expression."

Bailey said he hopes the program is successful enough to continue into the future. He said he hopes to increase the amount of participants throughout the semester.

this year, although only one has been scheduled.

Ernest Martin, 42, of Cleveland, is to be executed March 26 for killing a Cleveland drug store owner in 1983.

Fox, of Tontogany in northwest Ohio, killed Keckler, of Bowling Green, on Sept. 26, 1989. Fox confessed and was convicted in 1990 of aggravated murder and kidnapping.

He told authorities he found Keckler, a student at Owens Community College near Toledo, through an application she filled out at the restaurant where he worked. They met in a hotel lobby and then got into his car to look at businesses where restaurant supplies could be sold.

Authorities say Fox stabbed Keckler six times in the back, then drove to a secluded road where, he told police, he strangled her with a rope "just to make sure she was dead." Her body was found four days later in a ditch.

Execution witnesses Chad Keckler, an aunt, Angela Balderson, and the victim's father, Lester Keckler, remained quiet and stared straight ahead through the glass separating them from the death chamber. Balderson was on the edge of her seat, clutching Keckler's father's hand. As Fox's death was announced, she looked to the ceiling and her eyes filled with tears.

Also silent and still — in a second witness room — were Fox's spiritual adviser, the Rev. Robert Henning, a brother-in-law, the Rev. Jerry Wiles, and defense attorney Greg Meyers.

Meyers, of the state's public defender's office, took the place of Jessica Fox, who, at her father's request, decided Tuesday night against watching him die.

Fox's daughter, 20, had wanted to be with her father to the very end, but changed her mind after spending time with him Tuesday, Meyers said.

"Together the decision was simply, let us leave in a way where the last picture memory in your mind is one of a warm and loving father, not a person strapped down like an animal to an injection-execution table," he said.

The injection consisted of sodium pentothal, which induces unconsciousness; pancuronium bromide, a muscle relaxant that stops breathing; and potassium chloride, which stops the heart.

Outside the prison stood about 100 anti-death penalty protesters, many of them students from Roman Catholic high schools in Cleveland and Cincinnati.

"It should be God who decides when someone dies," said Tiera Carson-Nicholson, 16 and a sophomore at Trinity High School in suburban Cleveland.

Center sees rise in student usage

By Monica Frost

A recent study has found that college students seeking psychological counseling are facing more severe and complex emotional problems than in years past.

The study, which was conducted at Kansas State University, found the number of students treated for depression as well as the number of suicidal students doubled between 1989 and 2001.

Craig Vickio, the director of the University's Counseling Center, can attest to the study's findings as he has seen the severity of student's emotional problems increase over the years.

According to Vickio, the number of "emergency contacts," which require immediate attention, by the Counseling Center have doubled over the past 3 to 4 years.

The lead author of the study, Dr. Sherry A. Benton, told the New York Times that some of the more severe cases revolve around students dealing with multiple problems. Some of the problems that the study noticed to be rising were anxiety, stress, interpersonal relationships and career plans.

The Counseling Center sees similar problems on campus.

"It is common to have a student come in with a number of concerns," Vickio said.

Vickio noted they deal with a wide range of concerns but said the most common concerns among students are depression, anxiety and relationship issues.

"Well over 50 percent of the students are dealing with one or more of these concerns," he said.

Multiple problems may be occurring in students' lives, however, due to the multiple pressures college students face today.

"Many students end up short-changing themselves when they're pressed for time, and the easiest thing to cut out is one's own needs," Vickio said.

A more recent national survey conducted in 2002 also found that 80 percent of 274 counseling directors believe that the number of students with psychological disorders had increased over the past 5 years.

There is no definite answer, however, on why these numbers are increasing.

Vickio said that while some students do lack a strong family support system, there have been increasing numbers of family members "making greater efforts to be involved" in the counseling process.

The findings of these studies are not very hopeful for college students. However, the University Counseling Center is hoping a more proactive approach will encourage students to participate in the services the center has to offer.

Several hundred students participate in counseling each year and when you add the number of students that attend workshops and consult with counseling staff, the number is around 2,000 students per year that make use of the center.

U-WIRE EDITORIAL | OHIO STATE U.

Terrorists come in all shapes and sizes

The Immigration and Naturalization Service is in the process of requiring that certain foreigners staying in the United States register under the National Entry-Exit Registration System, presumably as another prong in the U.S. crusade against terrorism.

Those who fit the requirements for registration must go to their local INS office, submit proof of identification, be photographed and fingerprinted, and go through an interview. During the interview, registrants are asked questions on subjects involving identification papers, reasons for staying in the United States and where they are living while in the country. Registrants are also required to provide the date they plan to leave the United States, and they are expected to stick to that plan.

The claim could be made that these questions are no more grueling than those asked in a routine stop at customs and that it is normal to expect such treatment when traveling to other countries. But factor in mug shots, fingerprints and a government file, and the registration begins to sound less like a customs inspection and more like an arrest. Also, those who register are supposed to stay at the address and leave by the date they submit to the INS. Customs officials, on the other hand, do not keep tabs on those they have detained if there is no reason to do so.

Not only is the U.S. government forcing people to submit to this registration, but it is using a racist and ultimately arbitrary system to do so. The only people required to register are those from certain Middle Eastern and South Asian countries — and even then, only if they are males over the age of 16.

The rationale is obvious: namely, those who are more likely to be terrorists are required to register. But terrorism is not bred in just one country, or even 20. And it is certainly not limited to adult males. Women and children are just as capable of terrorism. Even though those who ordered and carried out the Sept. 11 hijackings were men from certain countries, it is wrong to force all men from these nations to undergo government scrutiny while men from other foreign countries are allowed to come and go as they please.

Real terrorists will find some way around the INS — registration, therefore, protects no one. In fact, it does nothing but inconvenience law-abiding foreigners. The only way the United States could even begin to protect itself from terrorism is by requiring everyone who steps in its borders to register — U.S. citizens included. And if that were to happen, as the now-ubiquitous saying goes, then the terrorists would have already won.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Vegans have very few meal options at U.

Walking into the Union one evening for dinner with a friend, I attempted at the various kiosks of food to strategically acquire something sustaining to my vegan lifestyle. Tired of the standard salad or pasta with meatless sauce or tofu stir fry, I was looking for a very simple, very tasty sandwich called Boca Burger. Unfortunately for me, however, the Grill did not have them in stock. They did have a vegetarian crispy patty, however, and informed me of such. I politely asked whether or not that was considered vegan and got one of those "do you have two heads on your shoulders?" looks.

What's a vegan? I then had to explain that vegetarians are those whose diet is exempt of animal and animal fat. A vegan, on the other hand, is one whose life is exempt of animal products — meaning animal meat products, dairy, eggs, etc.

After calling in a few high strung managers to inspect the ingredients of the crispy patty, I was informed that egg whites were indeed present. Would this be okay? No!

This is a scenario countless vegans and vegetarians on campus have encountered with University Dining Services. While there are a few (if any) vegetarian dishes on the menus at the various eateries, most of them contain cheese, which is in fact made of dairy milk (last time I checked) and thus incompatible with a tired, hungry vegan. Now, this wouldn't be an issue to complain about if the University had done something to remedy this issue — read the countless comment cards and perhaps provide soy-based cheeses and milks and gave a better understanding to Dining Service employees of what vegans and vegetarians need, but this is not the case. In fact, if a Dining Service employee has any idea what is wrapped up in the cabbage or what those brown lumps are in the rice, I am shocked and amazed!

This presents a problem not only to vegans and vegetarians, but the common omnivore as well. If Dining Services is unsure of what is in our food, what then are we eating? Except for standard veggies (which only have a few chemicals here and there to ensure growth, nothing major of course) what are we slapping on plates and handing to students, faculty, staff and other patrons? For those of us who are forced to buy a meal plan, shouldn't we be treated with enough respect to ensure that vegan entrees are offered on more than a once-a-month basis? And is it too much to ask that when one asks for vegan food and is ensured it, they receive it? Or must we walk around with our soy-based cheeses and soy-meat to be prepared by the Union and then charged for it as well? And who has time for that? In the meantime, I will just have to continue to pay $5 for a bun with some lettuce, tomato and pickle — veggie burgers aren't Boca, no matter how many times the label sticks.

Truth about France

EVAN MANROW
Opinion Columnist

Until recently, I could at least hope the French government believed its own rhetoric. I could at least respect their principle in announcing their opposition to a United States-led war on Iraq; after all, war should be the last option, right?

Wrong. My faith in the French lasted too long. I should have been at least wary in September of 2002 when French Foreign Minister Dominique de Villepin announced France's opposition to publicly reveal information about Iraq's nuke program, despite opposing action against Iraq. "These are not issues which we can deal with publicly," he announced on France Info Radio on Sept. 4, 2002. I should have at least been a little suspicious of a government who demanded public proof while denouncing proof publicly. Now, after France's Jan. 20 threat of a veto in the case of a war resolution in the U.N. Security Council, more information is arising about the French's interests in protecting Iraq and Iraq's weapons program.

In mid-September of 2002, Khadir Hamza, one of Saddam's former nuclear scientists, told the U.S. Senate that, indeed, the French had supplied enough highly enriched nuclear fuel to Iraq to make one nuclear bomb, and last week told CNN's Tucker Carlson and Paul Begala that the French made it clear they understood Iraq planned to use the material for weapons, not energy. Apparently, the French didn't want the Iraqis to back out of the exchange at the last minute, out of fear that the French would get a whiff of Iraq's real intentions, and not want any part of it. The French wanted to make it clear they didn't care what Iraq did with the material, so long as it was paid for.

No wonder France, along with Germany, was planning to spring a last minute inspections overhaul on the United States at the next U.N. Security Council meeting. Send in thousands of U.N. troops called "blue helmets," the French say, with no hopes of ever finding the materials Iraq still hides underground and in mobile weapons laboratories. France hopes the U.N. Security Council is still under the illusion the inspectors are really just playing hide-and-go-seek instead of confirming what Iraq says it has already done. On the contrary, the role of weapons inspectors has always been to verify that Iraq has dismantled what it says it has dismantled and to confirm intelligence reports, not to dig up 168,000 square miles of desert, about 4,000 square miles larger than the state of California, looking for a couple dozen buried centrifuges. The French know Iraq won't stop building weapons of mass destruction until we stop them with force, but they don't want us to find out how big a role they've played in Iraq's acquisition of those arms. So, instead of removing Saddam Hussein from power and halting Iraq's regime where it stands, the French advocate utilizing a war machine that, the last time it was confronted, stood by while an army of Bosnian Serbs slaughtered 7,000 Muslims in Srebrenica, a U.N. designated "safe area." Fortunately for us, the United Nations has a certain flair in demonstrating the effectiveness of its armies and policies, and the proposal to the United Nations security council is almost destined to fail.

The proposal itself isn't the worst part of France's activities. The worst part is how our Defense Department found out about them: the proposal was first mentioned in a German newsweekly called "der Spiegel." In other words, the French and Germans never had any intention of forewarning the United States about their plans and, as a senior U.S. government official ranted to a United Press International reporter, "In diplomacy, if you are trying to win friends and influence people the last thing in the world you want to do is to lay on the U.S. government — on the most important issue facing us — a major diplomatic proposal through the press. That's not exactly the way to go." From countries demanding multilateral support for any major foreign policy action, the dumping of a major proposal to use U.N. troops in Baghdad without the consultation of the United States, Great Britain and the rest of Europe who have all advocated the use of force is bewildering, to say the least. But not if you consider what the French have to hide.

Forget your Pill? Now you can.

the birth control you think about just 4 x a year.

Depo-Provera is 99.7% effective.

Not only is Depo-Provera 99.7% effective, but you need just one shot on time every 3 months to stay pregnancy-protected. So, unlike the Pill, Depo-Provera isn't your every day birth control.

Remember, Depo-Provera doesn't protect you from HIV/AIDS or other sexually transmitted diseases.

Some women using Depo-Provera experience side effects. The most common are irregular periods or spotting. Many women stop having periods altogether after a few months and some may experience a slight weight gain. You shouldn't use Depo-Provera if you could be pregnant, if you have had any unexplained periods, or if you have a history of breast cancer, blood clots, stroke, or liver disease. When using Depo-Provera, there may be a possible decrease in bone density. Ask your health care professional about prescription Depo-Provera.

LAWMAKERS TRY AGAIN TO LOWER LIMITS

COLUMBUS, Ohio (AP) — The threshold for drunken driving would be lowered under bills introduced in the Ohio House and Senate on yesterday. Ohio defines the standard for drunken driving as 0.10 percent blood alcohol content. The proposed legislation would set the limit at 0.08 percent, as mandated by a federal law Congress passed in 2000.

Preparation for terror alert

By Paul Singer
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

KIDRON, Ohio — America's terror alert has some people buying wood stoves, drums to collect rainwater, duct tape and plastic sheeting — just in case.

At Lehman's Hardware and Appliances, which specializes in non-electric household products and serves a large Amish community, sales are up among the non-Amish, much as they were during the Y2K scare and again after Sept. 11.

"Whenever something like this happens, we get a lot of phone calls," said Glenda Lehman Ervin, whose father opened the store in 1955. "We get a lot of questions, like, 'Do you have a wood stove that will cook and heat my house?' or, 'How hard is it to dig a well?'"

On Friday, the government raised the nation's terror alert from yellow to orange, the second-highest level, because of intelligence information indicating that al-Qaida was planning attacks on the United States.

Federal officials have recommended that Americans take basic disaster-preparation steps such as maintaining a three-day stockpile of food and water. They also recommend obtaining duct tape and plastic sheeting to seal a house in a chemical or biological attack.

Around the country, many Americans say they do not think there is much they can do to defend themselves from terrorism. But others are taking steps to prepare themselves.

Paul and Melissa Jackson of Tulsa, Okla., bought two 1,000-square-foot rolls of plastic sheeting and 11 rolls of duct tape Tuesday at Home Depot.

The couple said they have also agreed to rendezvous with about 30 family members at their vacation house near Grand Lake northeast of Tulsa if there is an attack. Their families have secured satellite phones in case communications are disrupted by terrorists.

"These people are crazy," said Melissa Jackson, 29. "You don't know what they're going to do. We don't think anything's going to happen, but it's better to be safe than sorry."

Paul Jackson, 34, said he had spent less than $100 on supplies, "so it's worth the risk if nothing happens."

Jim Ash, 50, of Overland Park, Kan., stopped by a Home Depot to buy a generator cord that he said he would have needed even if the terror alert level had not been raised.

"I don't think we really have that big of a risk around here, but it just doesn't hurt to be prepared," Ash said. "We do make sure that we have enough food on hand, like you would for a storm."

In Seattle, Federal Army & Navy Surplus has seen more sales in the past week of gas masks, which cost $20 to $111, said Jon Anderson. Other popular items have been first-aid kits, emergency supplies for cars and military-surplus meals.

Lehman's, about 50 miles south of Cleveland, said calls picked up when the terror alert was raised. "Those big 50-gallon drums for rainwater — we've gotten two calls for them today. I haven't heard that in a year and a half," Ervin said Tuesday.

The store is also stocking up on jumbo jugs of lamp oil.

to Lehman's to browse, not to prepare for a terrorist attack. Nevertheless, she said she is thinking about getting ready for an emergency.

"The water supply would be my major concern," Ekey said. "I'll probably buy some bottled water and make sure I have enough canned food around." She also planned to buy batteries for flashlights and radios.

Others are more skeptical.

Jerry Lizardo, 37, of Jersey City, N.J., who was shopping at Borinquen Home Improvement, said he had not taken any precautions. "I don't believe if they do any major violence or major attack that's going to do anything," he said.

Fred Ottensmeyer, an employee at Sullivan Hardware in Indianapolis, leaned up against a stack of boxed paint cans and said he is not sure precautions would make a difference. "My wife said it was like getting under a table in case of a nuclear attack," he said.

Byron Yeager, a 47-year-old Indianapolis maintenance worker with a tattoo of a burning cross on his hand, said outside a Lowe's hardware store: "There's a lot more things to be scared of in the city of Indianapolis than terrorists. If you walk around the corner and somebody clubs you over the head, duct tape's not going to protect you."

New plan for nuclear plant

By Joe Milicia
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CLEVELAND — A citizens group wants Gov. Bob Taft to revise emergency response plans for the state's nuclear plants. It says the plans don't include ways to deal with catastrophes such as a terrorist attack.

Ohio Citizen Action criticized the emergency plan for the Davis-Besse nuclear plant in a letter to Taft on yesterday, saying the plan is only for an accident in which radiation is slowly released. The group said the plan requires too much time for gathering and reviewing radiation data.

"If there was a terrorist attack or core meltdown, they would not have time to go through all those processes," said Amy Ryder, Cleveland director of Citizen Action.

Jim Greer, director of the Ottawa County Emergency Management Agency, said Citizen Action misinterpreted the document.

He said the plan for the nuclear plant is broad, but the county has other procedures to follow in case of various emergencies, including a terrorist attack.

"I can appreciate that if you don't look at the big picture and are not familiar with the agencies and the training, there may appear to be holes," Greer said.

Citizen Action wants Taft to withdraw his approval of the plan and to commission an independent study of emergency plans for the Davis-Besse plant near Toledo and the Perry nuclear plant east of Cleveland.

Citizen Action, which has said it wants to close Davis-Besse permanently, said the state should be more concerned about an emergency plan after a leak at Davis-Besse allowed boric acid to eat nearly through the 6-inch-thick steel cap covering the plant's reactor vessel. The plant has been shut down since February 2002, when it was closed for maintenance.

Taft spokesman Orest Holubec said the governor requested a briefing on the emergency plan and the safety of Davis-Besse last year. He said Taft will get the information before the plant restarts.

Citizen Action also wants the state to have a way of independently measuring radioactivity released from the plant.

The group said on-site monitoring equipment would prevent the state from having to rely solely on information from plant owner FirstEnergy Corp. in an emergency.

"The hole in the reactor head at Davis-Besse shows that we cannot count on the safety system and safety culture of FirstEnergy nor on safety-first oversight by the Nuclear Regulatory Commission," Citizen Action wrote.

FirstEnergy spokesman Todd Schneider said Citizen Action's request was irresponsible.

"The emergency plan associated with Davis-Besse is tested every year," Schneider said. "It's a well-executed plan that has been put into practice several times."

Depo-Provera®

Contraceptive Injection

medroxyprogesterone acetate injectable suspension

DEPO-PROVERA® Contraceptive Injection
(medroxyprogesterone acetate injectable suspension, USP)

This product is intended to prevent pregnancy. It does not protect against HIV infection (AIDS) and other sexually transmitted diseases.

What is DEPO-PROVERA Contraceptive Injection?

DEPO-PROVERA Contraceptive Injection is a form of birth control that is given as an intramuscular injection (a shot) in the buttock or upper arm once every 3 months (13 weeks). To continue your contraceptive protection, you must return for your next injection promptly at the end of 3 months (13 weeks). DEPO-PROVERA contains medroxyprogesterone acetate, a chemical similar to (but not the same as) the natural hormone progesterone, which is produced by your ovaries during the second half of your menstrual cycle. DEPO-PROVERA acts by preventing your egg cells from ripening. If an egg is not released from the ovaries during your menstrual cycle, it cannot become fertilized by sperm and result in pregnancy. DEPO-PROVERA also causes changes in the lining of your uterus that make it less likely for pregnancy to occur.

How effective is DEPO-PROVERA Contraceptive Injection?

The efficacy of DEPO-PROVERA Contraceptive Injection depends on following the recommended dosage schedule exactly (see "How often do I get my shot of DEPO-PROVERA Contraceptive Injection?"). To make sure you are not pregnant when you first get DEPO-PROVERA Contraceptive Injection, your first injection must be given ONLY during the first 5 days of a normal menstrual period. ONLY within the first 5 days after childbirth if not breast-feeding; and if exclusively breast-feeding, ONLY at the sixth week after childbirth. It is a long-term injectable contraceptive when administered at 3-month (13-week) intervals. DEPO-PROVERA Contraceptive Injection is over 99% effective, making it one of the most reliable methods of birth control available. This means that the average annual pregnancy rate is less than one for every 100 women who use DEPO-PROVERA. The effectiveness of most contraceptive methods depends in part on how reliably each woman uses the method. The effectiveness of DEPO-PROVERA depends only on the patient returning every 3 months (13 weeks) for her next injection. Your health-care provider will help you compare DEPO-PROVERA with other contraceptive methods and give you the information you need in order to decide which contraceptive method is the right choice for you.

The following table shows the percent of women who got pregnant while using different kinds of contraceptive methods. It gives both the lowest expected rate of pregnancy (the rate expected in women who use each method exactly as it should be used) and the typical rate of pregnancy (which includes women who became pregnant because they forgot to use their birth control or because they did not follow the directions exactly).

Who should not use DEPO-PROVERA Contraceptive Injection?

Not all women should use DEPO-PROVERA. You should not use DEPO-PROVERA if you have any of the following conditions:

- if you think you might be pregnant
- if you have any vaginal bleeding without a known reason

- if you have had cancer of the breast
- if you have had a stroke
- if you have or have had blood clots (phlebitis) in your legs
- if you have problems with your liver or liver disease
- if you are allergic to DEPO-PROVERA (medroxyprogesterone acetate or any of its other ingredients)

What other things should I consider before using DEPO-PROVERA Contraceptive Injection?

You will have a physical examination before your doctor prescribes DEPO-PROVERA. It is important to tell your health-care provider if you have any of the following:

- a family history of breast cancer
- an abnormal mammogram (breast x-ray), fibrocystic breast disease, breast nodules or lumps, or bleeding from your nipples
- kidney disease
- irregular or scanty menstrual periods
- high blood pressure
- migraine headaches
- asthma
- epilepsy (convulsions or seizures)
- diabetes or a family history of diabetes
- a history of depression
- if you are taking any prescription or over-the-counter medications

This product is intended to prevent pregnancy. It does not protect against transmission of HIV (AIDS) and other sexually transmitted diseases such as chlamydia, genital herpes, genital warts, gonorrhea, hepatitis B, and syphilis.

What if I want to become pregnant after using DEPO-PROVERA Contraceptive Injection?

Because DEPO-PROVERA is a long-acting birth control method, it takes some time after your last injection for its effect to wear off. Based on the results from a large study done in the United States, for women who stop using DEPO-PROVERA in order to become pregnant, it is expected that about half of those who become pregnant will do so in about 10 months after their last injection; about two thirds of those who become pregnant will do so in about 12 months; about 83% of those who become pregnant will do so in about 15 months; and about 93% of those who become pregnant will do so in about 18 months after their last injection. The length of time you use DEPO-PROVERA has no effect on how long it takes you to become pregnant after you stop using it.

What are the risks of using DEPO-PROVERA Contraceptive Injection?

1. Irregular Menstrual Bleeding
The side effect reported most frequently by women who use DEPO-PROVERA for contraception is a change in their normal menstrual cycle. During the first year of using DEPO-PROVERA, you might have one or more of the following changes: irregular or unpredictable bleeding or spotting, an increase or decrease in menstrual bleeding, or no bleeding at all. Unusually heavy or continuous bleeding, however, is not a usual effect of DEPO-PROVERA; and if this happens, you should see your health-care provider right away. With continued use of DEPO-PROVERA, bleeding usually decreases, and many women stop having periods completely. In clinical studies of DEPO-PROVERA, 55% of the women studied reported no menstrual bleeding (amenorrhea) after 1 year of use, and 68% of the women studied reported no menstrual bleeding after 2 years of use. The reason that your periods stop is because DEPO-PROVERA causes a resting state in your ovaries. When your ovaries do not release an egg monthly, the regular monthly growth of the lining of your uterus does not take place. When you stop using DEPO-PROVERA your menstrual period will usually, in time, return to its normal cycle.

2. Bone Mineral Changes
Use of DEPO-PROVERA may be associated with a decrease in the amount of mineral stored in your bones. This could increase your risk of developing bone fractures. The rate of bone mineral loss is greatest in the early years of DEPO-PROVERA use, but after that, it begins to resemble the normal rate of age-related bone mineral loss.

3. Cancer
Studies of women who have used different forms of contraception found that women who used DEPO-PROVERA for contraception had no increased overall risk of developing cancer of the breast, ovary, uterus, cervix, or liver. However, women under 35 years of age whose first exposure to DEPO-PROVERA was within the previous 4 to 5 years may have a slightly increased risk of developing breast cancer similar to that seen with oral contraceptives. You should discuss this with your health-care provider.

4. Unexpected Pregnancy
Because DEPO-PROVERA is such an effective contraceptive method, the risk of accidental pregnancy for women who get their shots regularly (every 3 months [13 weeks]) is very low. While there have been reports of an increased risk of low birth weight and neonatal infant death or other health problems in infants conceived close to the time of injection, such pregnancies are uncommon. If you think you may have become pregnant while using DEPO-PROVERA for contraception, see your health-care provider as soon as possible.

5. Allergic Reactions
Some women using DEPO-PROVERA Contraceptive Injection have reported severe and potentially life-threatening allergic reactions known as anaphylaxis and anaphylactoid reactions. Symptoms include the sudden onset of hives or swelling and itching of the skin, breathing difficulties, and a drop in blood pressure.

6. Other Risks

Women who use hormone-based contraceptives may have an increased risk of blood clots or stroke. Also, if a contraceptive method fails, there is a possibility that the fertilized egg will begin to develop outside of the uterus (ectopic pregnancy). While these events are rare, you should tell your health-care provider if you have any of the problems listed in the next section.

What symptoms may signal problems while using DEPO-PROVERA Contraceptive Injection?

Call your health-care provider immediately if any of these problems occur following an injection of DEPO-PROVERA:

- sharp chest pain, coughing up of blood, or sudden shortness of breath (indicating a possible clot in the lung)
- sudden severe headache or vomiting, dizziness or fainting, problems with your eyesight or speech, weakness or numbness in an arm or leg (indicating a possible stroke)
- severe pain or swelling in the calf (indicating a possible clot in the leg)
- unusually heavy vaginal bleeding
- severe pain or tenderness in the lower abdominal area
- persistent pain, pus, or bleeding at the injection site

What are the possible side effects of DEPO-PROVERA Contraceptive Injection?

1. Weight Gain
You may experience a weight gain while you are using DEPO-PROVERA. About two thirds of the women who used DEPO-PROVERA in clinical trials reported a weight gain of about 5 pounds during the first year of use. You may continue to gain weight after the first year. Women in one large study who used DEPO-PROVERA for 2 years gained an average total of 8.1 pounds over those 2 years, or approximately 4 pounds per year. Women who continued for 4 years gained an average total of 13.8 pounds over those 4 years, or approximately 3.5 pounds per year. Women who continued for 6 years gained an average total of 16.5 pounds over those 6 years, or approximately 2.75 pounds per year.

2. Other Side Effects
In a clinical study of over 3,900 women who used DEPO-PROVERA for up to 7 years, some women reported the following effects that may or may not have been related to their use of DEPO-PROVERA: irregular menstrual bleeding, amenorrhea, headache, nervousness, abdominal cramps, dizziness, weakness or fatigue, decreased sexual desire, leg cramps, nausea, vaginal discharge or irritation, breast swelling and tenderness, bloating, swelling of the hands or feet, backache, depression, insomnia, acne, pelvic pain, no hair growth or excessive hair loss, rash, hot flashes, and joint pain. Other problems were reported by very few of the women in the clinical trials, but some of these could be serious. These include convulsions, jaundice, urinary tract infections, allergic reactions, fainting, paralysis, osteoporosis, lack of return to fertility, deep vein thrombosis, pulmonary embolus, breast cancer, or cervical cancer. If these or any other problems occur during your use of DEPO-PROVERA, discuss them with your health-care provider.

Should any precautions be followed during use of DEPO-PROVERA Contraceptive Injection?

During the time you are using DEPO-PROVERA for contraception, you may skip a period, or your periods may stop completely. If you have been receiving your DEPO-PROVERA injections regularly every 3 months (13 weeks), then you are probably not pregnant. However, if you think that you may be pregnant, see your health-care provider.

2. Laboratory Test Interactions
If you are scheduled for any laboratory tests, tell your health-care provider that you are using DEPO-PROVERA for contraception. Certain blood tests are affected by hormones such as DEPO-PROVERA.

3. Drug Interactions
Cytidine (aminoglutethimide) is an anticancer drug that may significantly decrease the effectiveness of DEPO-PROVERA if the two drugs are given during the same time.

4. Nursing Mothers
Although DEPO-PROVERA can be passed to the nursing infant in the breast milk, no harmful effects have been found in these children. DEPO-PROVERA does not prevent the breasts from producing milk, so it can be used by nursing mothers. However, to minimize the amount of DEPO-PROVERA that is passed to the infant in the first weeks after birth, you should wait until 6 weeks after childbirth before you start using DEPO-PROVERA for contraception.

How often do I get my shot of DEPO-PROVERA Contraceptive Injection?

The recommended dose of DEPO-PROVERA is 150 mg every 3 months (13 weeks) given in a single intramuscular injection in the buttock or upper arm. To make sure that you are not pregnant at the time of the first injection, it is essential that the injection be given ONLY during the first 5 days of a normal menstrual period. If used following the delivery of a child, the first injection of DEPO-PROVERA MUST be given within 5 days after childbirth if you are not breast-feeding or 6 weeks after childbirth if you are exclusively breast-feeding. If you wait longer than 3 months (13 weeks) between injections, or longer than 6 weeks after delivery, your health-care provider should determine that you are not pregnant before giving you your injection of DEPO-PROVERA.

OVC suspends coaches, player

BRENTWOOD, Tenn. (AP) — The Ohio Valley Conference suspended both coaches and one player for a game each for their roles in a benches-clearing brawl between Eastern Kentucky and Tennessee State.

Interim commissioner Ron English reviewed tape of the Monday game in which 19 players were ejected.

"This situation did not include wild swinging, punching and kicking by multiple players," he said yesterday. "There were a few select punches thrown, and the game officials were able to identify those individuals involved, and took the appropriate action."

He suspended Eastern Kentucky coach Travis Ford and Tennessee State interim coach Hosea Lewis for a game for violating the league's sportsmanship rule that prohibits players from leaving the bench.

Tennessee State athletic director Teresa Phillips anticipated the suspension Tuesday by deciding to fill in for Lewis for the next game. Phillips will become the first woman to coach a men's Division I basketball team when Tennessee State visits Austin Peay Thursday.

"We are all fortunate that no serious injuries occurred," she said.

Eastern Kentucky next plays Saturday at Morehead State.

English also suspended Josh Cooperwood of Tennessee State for one game. Cedric Bryson of Tennessee State and Champ Slaughter and Kenyatta Dix of Eastern Kentucky are suspended for one game under NCAA rules because they were ejected for fighting.

Ford already has suspended Sherard Rogers for throwing some mini-basketballs at players, and English said that was sufficient.

"We regret and apologize to our university and to our fans for lack of sideline control of our basketball team and unsportsmanlike behavior," said Jack Lengyel, Eastern Kentucky's interim athletic director.

"Any further action by our coaches or teams will result in immediate suspension," he said.

On Monday, the trouble started with 8:13 left when Bryson and Eastern Kentucky's Shawn Fields started elbowing and bumping each other under the basket.

Officials stopped play and ejected both players for flagrant technical fouls. Videotape showed that Cooperwood put his arm around the neck of an Eastern Kentucky player and

BOWLING GREEN STATE UNIVERSITY

Donley dives for success

By Melanie Menz
SPORTS REPORTER

The sport of women's diving is different than any other sport. It is an individual sport, but also a team sport.

Divers have to practice hard, but also not too much. They have to get their arms out and their knees up, but not over extend them. They have to step right, jump high and not fall off the board, but the smaller the splash the better.

All of these things make up the sport of diving.

Ryan Donley is a senior on the Bowling Green women's diving team and has been diving for BG for four years.

She has seen it all, done what she can, and still holds many goals for this sport. She is a leader on and off the board for the seven other divers.

"I have been diving probably since the age of seven," Donley said. "At my summer pool they always had the Ohio State divers practice because there was a 5-meter, a 10-meter, two 3 meters, and two 1-meter boards. At the time we were the only outdoor pool that had them, so we would go in the morning and watch them dive. They would do exhibition sometimes and that is pretty much what got me started was watching college divers."

So Donley came to Bowling Green where she wanted to become one of those college divers that she watched while growing up.

"I had gone to Ohio University and had been to their pool and met their coach and it just didn't feel right," Donley said. "I came here and our coach at the time, Bill Kester, was showing me around. As soon as I walked into the pool, I knew this is where I belonged even before meeting the team."

When Donley walked into Copper Pool she saw the swimmers and divers practicing and heard music from the radio playing in the background.

Donley has been diving for 15 years and it is just as hard as it has ever been. The trick is to make it look easy and effortless without straining your body.

"People know that we practice a lot and it is not as easy as it looks," Donley said. "You can have mental blocks, you can freak yourself out, some days you have off days, and some days you are on the mark where you need to be and beyond. You put a lot into it. Three hours a day might not seem a lot, but you can only do dives so many times before you either start doing them worse or they don't get any better."

Josh Clugston, their new diving coach, helps her with each dive and gives her tips on ways to improve her technique.

There is so much technique that goes into the sport of diving.

Gymnastics making strides

By Matthew P. Lyons
SPORTS REPORTER

After last weekend's improvement on the balance beam, the BG women's gymnastics team heads to the University of New Hampshire for a four-team meet. The Falcons will compete with Michigan State University, George Washington University, and the University of New Hampshire.

Michigan State enters the meet ranked No. 32 in the country according to Gym Info and has a record of four wins and five losses on the 2003 season. The Spartans are ranked highest on the balance beam and scored their season high score of 195.175 at the end of January.

The Colonials of George

Washington travel to New Hampshire at No. 48 in the country. GW's high score of 191.95 makes them very comparable to the Falcons. George Washington is 5-6 in 2003.

The host school, New Hampshire, is No. 34 in the nation in the week's Gym Info rankings. The Wildcats are 7-4 this season and find their strength on the vault and balance beam. UNH is coming off a season high score of 195.1 at the Cat Classic held at the University of Missouri.

The Falcons, No. 49 in the country this week, are looking to improve on Sunday's performance at Northern Illinois University. BG scored a solid 192.525 in the loss to the Huskies, but made huge strides on the balance beam. With 48.225 points the beam squad began to climb off the shaky branch that had been beaming this season.

BG faces three other teams ranked in the nation's top 50 Saturday night at 7:00 p.m. on the ice in the Whittemore Center on the campus of the University of New Hampshire.

Track team heads to Findlay

By Erik Bell
SPORTS REPORTER

Only one team has the opportunity to call themselves champions. Last year at the Ohio Championships, it was Bowling Green.

The Falcons will look to defend their title in the Ohio Championships this Saturday in Findlay.

The championships will involve every Division I team in Ohio except for Kent State and Ohio State. All the Mid-American Conference schools as well as schools such as Dayton and Xavier will fight for the crown on Saturday.

There will also be a few Division II teams there, such as Ashland and the host school, Findlay, and a few Division III athletes who have been given permission to compete in the championships.

Head coach Scott Sehmman said that this meet poses a similar objective that the Central Collegiate Championships in Kent on January 25th posed.

"At the Central Collegiate Championships, our objective was to go after schools that had finished ahead of us in the MAC in the past, like Akron, Ohio and Toledo," Sehmman said. "We are looking to do the same thing in this meet."

The Falcons finished fourth at the Central Collegiate Championships, enough to beat Toledo and Akron. They did finish, one spot behind Ohio, however, as the Bobcats finished third.

Sehmman feels that the Ohio Championships could be the most important meet of the season two weeks from Saturday.

"This meet sets up the seeding for the MAC Tournament with the week off next week," Sehmman said.

The Falcons are coming off several impressive individual performances at the BGSU Women's Open on Saturday. Among the standouts for the Falcons were Alicia Taylor, Erin Leeper and Mary Willems.

Taylor finished first in the 60-meter dash and 60-meter hurdles. She feels with a team effort, they can repeat the victory.

"There will be a lot of competition," Taylor said. "If we all try our best and perform like we did in the Women's Open, we should win."

Leeper finished first in the long jump and third in the high jump, while Willems finished first in the weight throw and second in the

Indiana tops Michigan

By Dan Gelston

BLOOMINGTON, Ind. — Bracey Wright scored 21 points and Jeff Newton added 20 points and 10 rebounds as Indiana snapped a five-game losing streak with a 63-49 win over Michigan last night.

The Hoosiers (15-8, 5-5 Big Ten) were in their worst skid since the 1971-72 season — the last time they lost five straight — and a possible NCAA tournament berth appeared to be slipping away.

Coach Mike Davis decided enough was enough, and it was time for a change in the starting lineup. He inserted freshman Marshall Strickland at point guard, slid Tom Coverdale over to shooting guard and benched Kyle Hornsby.

Michigan, which entered tied for first in the Big Ten, has all three conference losses on the road. Daniel Horton led the Wolverines (14-9, 7-3) with 16 points.

Wright, whose torrid start was derailed by an injury, appears to be back in the groove. After scoring 20 points in a loss to Michigan State, Wright followed with a 7-for-12 effort from the floor.

He scored five points to open the second half, and Newton added a basket for a 39-20 lead, Indiana's largest of the game.

The Wolverines went on an 14-3 run, capped by Lester Abram's three-pointer, and pulled to 42-34. It wouldn't be their last run, but they couldn't sustain them enough to mount a serious challenge.

Wright and Newton followed with consecutive three-point plays for a 48-34 lead, only to have Michigan pull within 10 twice more with 6:15 remaining.

The Hoosiers finally put them away for good in the closing minutes. Newton scored five points as part of a game-ending 17-5 run.

The Hoosiers out-rebounded the Wolverines by eight in the first half which led to a 15-2 edge in second-chance points.

NASCAR drivers safer than ever

SAFETY MEASURE: NASCAR Winston Cup Series driver Dale Earnhardt Jr. puts on a safety restraint device before his qualifying run Monday at Daytona International Speedway.

By Jenna Fryer
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

DAYTONA BEACH, Fla. — Under relentless scrutiny for two straight years over safety precautions, NASCAR heads into the 2003 season with a new Research and Development Center, a handful of innovations and — most importantly — without a recent driver death.

When the season opens Sunday with the Daytona 500, drivers will be safer than ever before.

But Gary Nelson, who as NASCAR's director of competition spearheads the safety effort, refuses to take satisfaction in the improved state of the 54-year-old stock-car series.

"When it comes to safety, we just cannot put our heels up and say 'Look at how far we've come,'" Nelson said. "It's something that always has to be on the front burner, we always have to be working hard to make more and more gains. It's a never-ending process."

It's a different mindset for NASCAR, which was long criticized for resisting safety improvements. What was standard in open-wheel racing was ignored in the stock car series.

After Dale Earnhardt's fatal wreck in the Daytona 500 two years ago, the sanctioning body faced unprecedented attention. His death was the last for NASCAR's three main series, and it followed three fatalities the year before.

Since then, NASCAR has made significant improvements at its own pace, which has sometimes seemed like a crawl.

Data recorders are in cars, head and neck restraints are mandatory, and medical liaisons are on NASCAR's staff.

Outside experts are routinely consulted on various issues. In a recently begun practice, NASCAR meets with drivers twice a year to present its latest improvements and explain what the experts have learned.

"We have these seminars, we tape them so if a guy can't make it we can go over it with him later, and we approach it like, 'Don't believe us because NASCAR says so and NASCAR knows everything. Believe it because these experts say so, and they can prove it,'" Nelson said.

The centerpiece of NASCAR's safety push is its Research and Development Center in Concord, N.C. The 61,000-square-foot center opened in January and houses all of the ongoing projects.

Among the things being worked on:

— SAFER walls: The Steel and Foam Energy Reduction wall, also known as "soft" walls, absorb impact and have been installed in portions of the 2.5-mile tracks at Indianapolis Motor Speedway and Talladega Superspeedway. Barrier experts at the University of Nebraska, led by Dr. Dean Sicking, are looking at possible implementation at other tracks.

— Composite seats: The carbon-fiber seats are designed to make cars' cockpits safer. Not mandated, but Nelson said studies have proven the bendable seats are much safer than the stiff-as-board seats long believed to be most beneficial.

— Incident data recorders: Referred to as "black boxes," they are required on all cars in NASCAR's three national series. They are used to tabulate the G-force load drivers withstand upon impact and help reconstruct accidents.

The data recorded in 2002 was put into an "incident database" that provides an in-depth history of what drivers and cars experience during impact. They also serve as a guide for further safety enhancements.

But there are still areas NASCAR needs to improve.

The series has no mandatory baseline testing for concussions, as in CART, the Indy Racing League, and Formula One. Also, Rick Mast's recent retirement due to carbon monoxide poisoning sent NASCAR scrambling to find a way to clean the air its drivers breathe.

Concussions became a serious issue last season when Dale Earnhardt Jr. admitted that he drove for several weeks with what he thought was a concussion stemming from a crash. Following the revelation, NASCAR mandated that drivers undergo any tests recommended by track physicians.

Open-wheel series require drivers to take Immediate Post-Concussion Assessment and Cognitive Testing, a 20-minute exam on a laptop computer that measures brain processing, memory and motor skills.

Donley hopes to finish year strong

ing that it can be nearly impossible to think of everything at once.

Knees need to go up, arms need to go out, you might need to twist, flip, stay straight, step right and not fall off the board.

"I am thinking don't back or fail a dive," Donley said. "Bocking is where you do your hurdle and you do your steps and then you do your hurdle where you bring your knee up and you bring it back down and you don't go off. If you go off you fall, or you don't do the dive you are supposed to do."

Her toughest dive these days is a first one and a half straight off the 3-meter, but she knows she can do it.

She is able to watch herself dive on a Tevo, which can help her see the things that she does wrong and help her improve.

It helps her record her dive and then be able to watch herself in slow motion so she can see exactly what she has been doing right or wrong on both boards.

Her favorite board right now is the 1-meter.

"I have my moments where I like one more than the other and then it will switch," Donley said. "I have to say that I enjoy the 1-meter a bit more than the 3-meter just because I am able to compete. I have the degree of difficulty that is similar to other divers in the MAC."

Just like any other athlete on campus, Donley finds the time to compete and keep up with her grades. She even finds it easier to study and do well when diving is in season.

With time management skills that she has learned throughout her four years at BG, every hour in her day becomes an important one. With either studying, going to class, going to practice, getting a bite to eat or catching up on her sleep, she finds time to do it all.

After graduation Donley would like to go to graduate school at Ohio State University and either study criminology or secondary education, but there are still some goals that she would like to accomplish in diving before she is through.

"I would definitely love to be in the top eight at MAC's in the 1-meter," Donley said. "Last year I think I got 13th and I messed up on one dive that I didn't hit correctly for fives and sixes that set me back or I would have been really close."

The Mid-American Conference Championship is two weeks away and will be Ryan Donley's last meet as a Falcon.

Sorenstam accepts invite

ANNIKA SORENSTAM, PROFESSIONAL GOLFER

By Stephen Hawkins
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

FORT WORTH, Texas — Annika Sorenstam has decided to tee it up against the men, accepting an invitation to play in the Colonial in May.

She would be the first woman in 58 years to compete on the PGA Tour.

"Annika's accomplishments show that she is certainly deserving," tournament chairman Dee Finley said yesterday.

No golfer has won more tournaments than Sorenstam over the last two seasons. Tiger Woods included. Last year alone, she shattered the LPGA Tour scoring record and won 13 times around the world, the most by anyone in nearly 40 years.

"All the attention and speculation is flattering, and I appreciate that the Bank of America Colonial Golf Tournament is giving me this opportunity to compete in a PGA Tour event," Sorenstam said in a statement released by the sponsor.

"There were many invitations, but the golf course and schedule of the Colonial were ideal. For all the well-wishers who want to know why I would accept such a challenge the answer is simple: I am curious to see if I can compete in a PGA Tour event."

Sorenstam's main stipulation about playing against men has been to compete on a course that does not require power off the tee. Colonial is 7,080 yards (par 70) and puts a premium on accuracy.

"I'm as curious as anybody to see how the best LPGA player of today, and possibly all time, will play against the men," Phil Mickelson said. "Colonial is a wonderful course for her to do it on."

Mickelson, a past champion at Colonial, predicted that Sorenstam would "definitely" make the cut and probably would finish 20th.

How will he do? "I hope 19th or better," Mickelson said.

The Colonial was made famous by Ben Hogan, who won five titles on his home course, and is steeped in tradition. No course has hosted a PGA Tour event longer than Colonial.

The last time a woman played a PGA Tour event, Babe Zaharias qualified for the 1945 Los Angeles Open and made the 36-hole cut before a 79 knocked her out of the final round.

Connecticut club pro Suzy Whaley has said she will play in the Greater Hartford Open in July. She qualified by winning a PGA of America sectional tournament, even though she was allowed to hit from a shorter set of tees.

At the Colonial, May 22-25, Sorenstam would play from the same tees as the men. The course hosted the 1991 U.S. Women's Open, but Sorenstam did not play.

The Colonial has one of the smallest fields on tour — 114 to 120 players, while most events have 132 to as many as 156 players. The 32-year-old Sorenstam is getting one of the 12 sponsor exemptions for the event.

"Our course has provided a great platform to showcase the world's best players for more than 50 years, and we look forward to having a future Hall of Famer such as Annika compete at the Colonial," said Jim Thigpen, president of Colonial Country Club.

Phillips first female coach

By Teresa M. Walker
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Forget women's rights and gender equity. When Teresa Phillips decided to substitute for a suspended coach, the athletic director saw herself as Tennessee State's only option.

She will make history Thursday night as the first woman to coach a men's Division I basketball team. Phillips said she couldn't give the job to the only remaining assistant in just his second season as a coach.

"No matter what the criticism may be, I felt they needed an authority figure on the bench," Phillips said Wednesday. "With all the circumstances that have happened, it's not like it's been a normal year."

Far from it.

Phillips will be the third coach this season for the Tigers (2-20). Nolan Richardson III quit Jan. 8 after admitting he brought a gun to a Christmas night argument with assistant coach Hosea Lewis.

The Tigers are mired in a 16-game losing skid. Lewis, the interim head coach, was suspended by the Ohio Valley Conference on yesterday because of a benches-clearing fight Monday night against Eastern Kentucky. Chris Graves, who was the third assistant last season, was the only coach left.

That prompted Phillips' decision, which has been the talk of radio and television around the country.

Plenty of men coach women's college basketball teams. Connecticut coach Geno Auriemma has won three NCAA titles and two out of the last three.

But only two women have ever served as coaches for a men's Division I team, and both were assistants: Bernadette Locke at Kentucky and Stephanie Ready at Coppin State.

"I don't feel like I'm holding the banner up for anything," Phillips said. "I'm trying to be supportive of our program and our team. We have a lot of healing to be done."

Phillips has the experience. Her career record is 212-189 as a coach at Fisk and Tennessee State, where she took the Tigers to two NCAA tournament berths. She also was an assistant at Vanderbilt.

She thought about just assisting Graves, but said she should take any flak from playing Austin Peay (15-6, 8-2), the OVC's second-best team and winners of seven straight games.

The Tigers will be without two players, suspended for their part in Monday's brawl. Josh Cooperwood is their second-leading scorer, and Cedric Bryson is their center.

"I'm a realist, so I really just want to put these young men in a position to have a good outing, represent themselves really well and going out to play to win," she said.

Austin Peay coach Dave Loos said his Governors are more concerned with winning a conference title than their opponent's coach.

Loos said he respects Phillips as a coach and administrator. He thinks she will do well, but he declined to comment about her decision to step in as acting coach.

"Teresa has been working through a very difficult situation, one in which she felt her course of action was the best for their program. ... She is the only one who really understands those circumstances that led to it," he said.

shot put.

Amy Henry finished third in the 60-meter dash. Henry feels the team could be in the right position to defend their title.

"The team is going in very well," Henry said. "If we compete up to our full potential, we'll be fine."

The Falcons also got first place finishes on Saturday from Amber Walker in the 200-meter dash, Elise Gould in the one-mile run, Niki Sutor in the 600-meter run, Melissa Krueger in the 800-meter run, Rachel Perme in the high jump, Nicole Carter in the triple jump and Kerri McClung in the shot put.

Sehmann hopes that the plethora of first place finishes leads to increased confidence.

"We are getting better each week, and with this comes confidence," Sehmann said. "With confidence, hopefully, comes better performances and the ability to believe they can compete with other people in the MAC."

After the All-Ohio Championships the Falcons will take a week off. Then on Friday, Feb. 28 they will compete in the MAC Indoor Championships, which will be the last meet of the indoor season.

pulled backward, prompting players from both benches to run onto the court.

English did not further punish the other players who left their benches. Videotape showed those players did not fight and either stood alone or held one another.

Referees continued the game, even though only four players remained for each team. When Tennessee State's Jeremy Jackson fouled out with 5:24 remaining, the teams went 4-on-3, and Eastern Kentucky won 89-72.

Problems not over; Hoosiers hit road

They led 32-18 at halftime.

Strickland scored six points in his second career start. Hornsby, who played fewer than 20 minutes only twice this season, was scoreless in 14 minutes.

The problems aren't necessarily over for Indiana, however. The Hoosiers play their next games on the road — at Wisconsin, Iowa and Illinois. They're 0-4 on the road in Big Ten games and haven't won away from Assembly Hall since Dec. 31.

Blue Jackets defeat San Jose, 1-0

COLUMBUS, Ohio (AP) — Marc Denis stopped 38 shots and Rick Nash provided the only goal as the Columbus Blue Jackets beat the San Jose Sharks 1-0 on last night.

It was the first time the Blue Jackets had ever won a 1-0 game.

The shutout was Denis' third of the year and seventh of his career. He faced 19 shots in the first two periods and 19 in the third as the Sharks turned up the pressure.

Denis came into the game 0-4-0 against the Sharks with a 5.11 goals-against average.

San Jose, which lost its fourth in a row, had beaten the Blue Jackets in their last four meetings. Columbus tied a franchise record as it stretched its home points streak to six (4-0-2).

Nash, a top contender for rookie of the year, picked up his 12th goal — and first game-winner — at 7:13 of the first period.

Turner unbeat despite injuries

By Andy Resnik
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

COLUMBUS, Ohio — Her will to succeed strengthened by numerous injuries, Ohio State center LaToya Turner vows not to be upset by the latest one.

"It's very frustrating, but things happen for a reason," said Turner, who broke her left arm in a game last week. "You can't really dwell on the negative things. There are other things that you can think about. You can get a lot of things done when you're hurt."

She would know. It seems like Turner is always coping with an injury.

Two of her six left-knee surgeries have come while she was playing for the Buckeyes, forcing the 6-foot-3 junior forward to sit out most of the last two seasons.

Her game of mid-range jumpers, blocked shots and physical low-post defense was just starting to get back into form when she broke her left arm while diving for a loose ball on Feb. 6 against Minnesota.

Even after her arm slammed against the hard court, Turner said it never occurred to her that she could have avoided an injury by staying on her feet.

"You're going to get injured. Some people are fortunate not to, some people are accident prone, but you're not going to sit and try to prevent it from happening," she said. "You've got to go out there and do what you do every day in life."

Then she added: "I don't think I'm accident prone. Things happen."

Turner has had more bad injury luck than anyone else on the 22nd-ranked Buckeyes (17-5, 8-3 Big Ten).

She tore the anterior cruciate ligament in her left knee as a senior at Pickerington High School and had to have surgery before her freshman season at Ohio State.

Turner then tore the ACL graft in the knee as a sophomore and missed the majority of that season following surgery. She was granted a medical redshirt last season, sitting out most of it after having arthroscopic surgery on her left knee in December 2001.

She's expected to miss at least a month nursing the broken arm, but plans on a shorter rehab and, hopefully, being a factor in the postseason.

"I'll be back soon," she said. Coach Jim Foster doesn't doubt her prediction.

"I tend to be on the optimistic side when it comes to these things if in fact the player has a fire about them and really wants it, and I sense that in her," Foster said. "She knows how to deal with pain, and that's part of the process of healing."

While having to watch her teammates play in games and practice, Turner still works out with them in the weight room.

"She was in there for an hour yesterday [Monday] on a couple of the exercise machines working her rear end off," Foster said. "I think in her mind she's going to be back, she's going to be ready and she's going to be prepared when she does come back."

Turner's teammates marvel at her upbeat attitude.

"Her spirits are great," guard Caitly Matter said. "Obviously we feel really bad for her, but you know you've got to turn around and say 'Ok, you've got to get better, you've got to get back and just stay positive.' And that's what she's been doing."

Forward Courtney Coleman expects Turner to be a better player when she returns. "She'll come back stronger than ever, more physical and more prepared and ready," Coleman said.

HURTING: Ohio State's LaToya Turner, center, is helped by teammates after a fall in the second half against Minnesota Thursday, Feb. 6 in Columbus.

Turner came to the Buckeyes in 1999 as one of their most heralded recruits in years. She was voted Ohio Ms. Basketball as a high school senior while leading Pickerington to its second straight Division I state championship.

Then, Turner was named Big Ten Freshman of the Year after leading the Buckeyes in scoring (11.2 points), rebounding (6.0) and blocked shots (1.3) in the 1999-2000 season.

Three years and several injuries later, Turner refuses to blame the ailments for derailing her once promising career, which includes one more season of eligibility.

She is averaging a modest 8.8 points and 5.3 rebounds a game this season and leads the Buckeyes with 33 blocked shots.

"Whatever happens, happens," Turner said. "I just have to accept them [the injuries] and move on."

With her track record, don't bet against it.

MARYLAND CANCELS FIRST AMBER ALERT

BALTIMORE (AP) — Maryland's first Amber Alert was canceled yesterday after police said the father of a missing 2-month-old girl fabricated a story that she was taken by an unlicensed taxi driver. Police continued to search for the infant, A'Shia Jenkins. They declined to say whether the father is considered a suspect in Tuesday's disappearance.

Gambler becomes a victim

By Terry Kinney
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CINCINNATI—An Akron businessman accused of running an illegal gambling operation was victimized by a man who has made a deal with prosecutors, a defense lawyer told a jury Wednesday.

Philip F. George Jr., 43, is on trial on charges of gambling, cheating, telecommunications fraud, operating a gambling house and conspiracy. He could be sentenced to up to 39 years in prison if convicted of all 11 counts.

Prosecutors say "instant bingo" tickets were sold at dozens of bars around Ohio. They charge that George and James H. Jackson, 64, of the Akron suburb of Tallmadge, shared in profits that should have gone to charities.

"There is no indication that Phil ever took a dime that wasn't his," defense lawyer Robert Gutzwiller told the jury during opening statements in Hamilton County Common Pleas Court. "There is no motive, other than charitable motive, for Phil George to do any of this."

Gutzwiller said he will ask the jurors to "follow the money."

"The money was stopping at Jimmy Jackson," Gutzwiller said.

Jackson has pleaded guilty to three of the 11 charges on which he was indicted, and is awaiting sentencing. Prosecutors expect him to testify against George, in exchange for a reduced prison term. The trial could continue for several weeks.

Prosecutors said George and Jackson were partners, with George taking a lead role.

"He called all the shots in the operation," prosecutor Bill Anderson said.

Anderson told jurors that the gambling scheme reaped between $50 million and $60 million in illegal profits in about two years. In raids in November 2000, authorities confiscated about $4.8 million, including about $3.6 million from Jackson's home.

No money was found at George's home or business.

Prosecutors said he had moved it somewhere else before the raids.

They said the operation's leaders were careful to deal only in cash and to keep no records of any transactions.

"I cannot show you where all the money went, but I do know where it didn't go," Anderson told the jury. "It didn't go to the charitable organizations that were supposed to get it."

One charity that received some of the proceeds was Child Care Foundation Inc., an Akron business formed by Jackson and George to operate the instant-bingo scam, prosecutors said.

MEMORIAL: A monument placed near where human remains were recovered during the first week of the recovery effort of the space shuttle Columbia is shown near Hemphill, Texas.

Human remains found in search

By Lisa Falkenberg
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

HEMPHILL, Texas — Crews searching for space shuttle debris found "significant amounts" of human remains believed to be Columbia's astronauts, an official said yesterday.

Sheriff Tommy Maddox said the remains were found in Sabine County, which is bordered by a reservoir that divers have been searching along the Louisiana line. A door and window were also found Tuesday.

"Lord have mercy on all the other things found," Maddox said without elaborating.

Human remains found during the search have been taken to the military mortuary at Dover Air Force Base in Delaware for identification. NASA has said remains from all seven astronauts have been found.

Dive teams using sonar equipment returned yesterday to the 75-mile-long Toledo Bend Reservoir, where people had reported seeing large chunks of debris fall shortly after the Columbia broke apart high over Texas on Feb. 1.

Despite sunny weather, underwater visibility was less than 2 feet, said Environmental Protection Agency spokesman Dave Bary.

"It's more a case of feel than see," Bary said. "That takes time."

Yesterday, members of a new command team and search crews from the U.S. Forest Service and U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service are expected to arrive and eventually take over coordination of the search in five East Texas counties.

National Guard troops, locals and Texas Department of Public Safety troopers helping with the ground search will be phased out and relieved by new crews from around the country, Maddox said.

"Given that this is a national crisis, it deserves a nationally based response. I think it's indicative that we're in this for the long haul," said Bob Miller, a spokesman for the National Park Service.

Officials from NASA and the Federal Emergency Management Agency have overseen the search, but local law enforcement officials have helped coordinate the movement of individual teams of searchers.

The search in east Texas will probably take several more weeks, Miller said. In western Louisiana, the search is mostly over.

GUANTANAMO DETAINEES REWARDED

GUANTANAMO BAY NAVAL BASE, Cuba (AP) — More than half the 650 detainees at Guantanamo are getting rewards for good behavior, the U.S. military said yesterday during Eid-al-Adha celebrations. About 58 percent of the detainees are getting one or more of 23 rewards. It might be an extra blanket, a book or a soccer ball, officials said.

MUTINY: Army soldiers stand guard near the Government Palace in La Paz, Bolivia, yesterday to reinforce security in the area due to striking local police.

Police join violent protests

By Graham Gori
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LA PAZ, Bolivia — Striking police officers in the Bolivian capital led violent street demonstrations yesterday that left at least 10 people dead and 53 injured in clashes between protesters and government troops.

Government troops fired tear gas, rubber bullets and live ammunition at the striking police officers and civilian demonstrators, who stormed the presidential palace to protest government proposals to raise taxes and cut spending on social programs.

As smoke from fires swirled through La Paz's historic center, President Gonzalo Sanchez de Lozada gave a nationally televised speech appealing for calm and announcing he would suspend the tax increases.

"I plead with all Bolivians to put an end to the violence and to begin honest negotiations," Sanchez de Lozada said. "I ask one more thing from our father above — God save Bolivia."

The director of the capital's main public hospital, Eduardo Chavez, confirmed that at least 10 people were killed. He said five of the dead were police officers who died from gunshot wounds.

There was no breakdown immediately available of how many of the at least 53 people injured were civilians, police or government troops. More injured and dead were expected, Chavez said.

"I've been a doctor here for 30 years and I've never seen such a bloody day," he said.

The mutiny began Tuesday night when officers in four precincts refused to begin patrols and demanded a 40 percent pay increase.

Officers in the capital are paid the equivalent of about $105 per month, a salary that would have been eroded by proposed income tax increases ranging from 7 percent to 13 percent.

By morning, nearly all police in La Paz and the surrounding area had left their posts despite talks with government officials to avert the strike.

Street protests began Monday after Sanchez de Lozada, struggling to lift Bolivia out of a five-year recession, approved tax hikes that would reduce the buying power of South America's poorest nation.

"The citizens here are full of fear," said Fernando Solis, a businessman who was trapped by the protests inside the Paris Hotel in the city's historic center.

Iranian police denounce V-Day

By Ali Akbar Dareini
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TEHRAN, Iran — Cupid, drop the bow.

That's the word from Iranian police, who have ordered shops to remove heart-and-flower decorations and have confiscated other symbols of what religious authorities consider a decadent, Western event — Valentine's Day.

The vice police on Wednesday sealed several shops in wealthy north Tehran and ordered others to remove images of couples embracing or other "corrupt materials" from display windows.

In ultraconservative Iran, public embracing between men and women is taboo while Valentine's Day and all its trappings are seen as promoting Western values.

"Vice police gave me 48 hours Monday to close," said angry shopkeeper Hamid Mahdavi. "Having my shop closed Thursday means that I would go bankrupt."

A written notice issued by plainclothes officers warned the store owner that he had to remove all cards and other staples of the holiday from his Tina Card shop.

Down the street, another store was already forced to close.

"This is all heart-themed cards. Is this corruption?" Mahdavi said while his assistant continued to sell the banned items to young customers.

The holiday crackdown, apparently the first since the 1979 Islamic revolution, drew scorn from shoppers. Some saw the effort as further proof that the regime is out of touch with the

"It's only rigidity and cultural backwardness," said Fariba Sabet as she bought a card with a red heart and rose for her son-in-law. "Through the crackdown, they only buy people's greater hatred and enmity."

Mahdavi said the store closures appeared to be a response to an increase in young people showing interest in celebrating the holiday.

The crackdown seemed to be limited to wealthy north Tehran, a posh area whose citizens are more exposed to Western culture than the rest of the city and are more likely to adopt what the Iranian establishment sees as unIslamic trends.

At one shop, the window was filled with stuffed animals and a heart-shaped pillow embroidered with the words "I love you" in English.

Iran faces an internal struggle between hard-liners and reformists, who back President Mohammed Khatami's program of social and political freedoms.

Valentine's Day and its tradition of exchanging gifts with the opposite sex contradicts conservative morals in a country where contact between unrelated men and women is strongly discouraged.

Shopkeepers at the sprawling Qaem Shopping Mall near Tajrish Square in north Tehran said they have been prevented from a showing off products for the Feb. 14 holiday.

STATE BRIEFINGS

State ban found unconstitutional

TIFFIN, Ohio (AP) — A Seneca County judge ruled the state's decades-old ban on carrying concealed weapons violates the Ohio Constitution as he dismissed a case against a woman charged with having a hidden gun in a car.

In a similar case, the Ohio Supreme Court has agreed to hear a challenge by activists from Hamilton County who argue the law is illegal. The activists say they want to carry guns for self-defense and sued to try to prevent Cincinnati and county authorities from enforcing the ban.

Seneca Common Pleas Judge Michael P. Kelbley said in his 18-page ruling issued Tuesday that the law prevents Ohioans from defending themselves.

Kathryn J. Howard, 28, of Fostoria, asked the court in November 2002 to dismiss the charge against her, saying she needed a concealed gun for protection because she had been sexually assaulted in the past.

Howard was a passenger in a car pulled over in June 2002 in Fostoria, and police found her loaded 9mm pistol under her seat, court documents said.

Black parents don't stress education

SHAKER HEIGHTS, Ohio (AP) — Black students don't perform as well as whites in this upscale suburb because their parents don't stress education enough, a new study said.

In his new book, "Black American Students in an Affluent Suburb: A Study of Academic Disengagement," researcher John Ogbu concluded that, unlike many white parents, many black parents do not stress homework, attend teacher conferences or encourage advanced placement classes.

Ogbu also blamed mistrust of schools by blacks, discrimination, lower teacher expectations of black students and a lack of black role models who have excelled academically.

In response, Claude Steele, a professor of psychology at Stanford University, said such anecdotal information can be useful for illustrating problems but should not be used to draw sweeping conclusions.
